But the path she decides to take is not a simple one. Will Michelle find out who murdered her ex-husband in cold blood? Book 2: James Findlay has made some powerful enemies. As his small, island nation only representative to the Paris climate conference, he holds a unique amount of power of his own. But he knows too much. For instance, he knows that Earth is still in an Ice Age, after 2.6 million years of persistent polar ice. Why would this be dangerous? Because the international power brokers depend on the conference delegates approving their measures. If global warming is found to be good, instead of dangerous, their multi-trillion dollar plan will fail. Warmth in an Ice Age might not be seen as dangerous. Findlay also knows that the power brokers have been confusing pollution and carbon dioxide. He knows that CO₂ is a beneficial gas which has actually been greening the Earth a fact that the UN's scientists are not discussing. After Findlay is drugged at the conference, he realizes that someone is desperate to stop him. When Findlay finds his fiancée, Moira, murdered in their hotel room, he suspects that someone at the conference had arranged to kill her. He feels that someone is trying to warn him off and not at all subtly. But Findlay realizes that much more is at stake than his own life and the lives of those close to him. What he does next could make the difference between survival and death of billions of his fellow humans. Book 3: Kaitlin Nicole lives a perfectly normal life, in a perfectly normal suburb, with her perfectly normal family and her perfectly normal job. That's why everyone is so shocked when Kaitlin's children are kidnapped waiting for their mom to pick them up after school. Everyone that is except Kaitlin.
