

RUPERTS SHADOW

Jan Blackmore's third novel is a tale of hardship, conflict and reward. In 1914 as England prepares for war, teenager Hector Grant assumes the role of breadwinner following his father's desertion. Dissatisfied by the post-war economic stagnation Hector joins the communist inspired Movement but although stimulated by his leading role in civil disobedience these activities are at odds with his entrepreneurial spirit. Through a decade of unemployment and deprivation, Hector is determined to succeed. His affection for his youngest sibling is unfailing but Rupert's killer instinct in the boxing ring masks a scar of hatred for the father he never knew. His progress in the ring is blocked by leaders of London's underworld and his defiance leads to murder and a lifelong feud. Attached to the defeated British Expeditionary Force Rupert's war is one of courage and horror and he returns home consumed with bitterness. Hector remains steadfast but can he deflect the mentally scarred Rupert from his plan to avenge the brutal assault on his mistress and bring down the gangsters who threaten their very existence?
