As someone who has migrated from the States into that sleepy corner of the world, Mila is bored and lonely, and feels like Cinderella, getting up early every morning for the thankless task of doing chores around the dilapidated house all day. Then, one day, she comes across a young man who's been washed up on the shore. He can't remember anything about who he was or even what his name is. Her parents take him in, and he begins to fill in what's been missing in her life. And then strange things begin to happen in the house and out... like magic. And this is when Tomas, the name they gave the stranger, is around. Still, they get closer. But just when she thinks he might actually like her, he turns away. What is he hiding? Are you okay? Mila asked. He cocked his head, but didn't answer. She tried again in Spanish, and finally in (bad) Yucatec. At least he recognized the words, unlike the other locals who pretended not to understand her, and he smiled and nodded gratefully. My name is Mila, she said. What's your name? I am. And then he turned so pale she was afraid he was going to die, after all. I don't remember. Mila let out a breath she didn't realize that she'd been holding. Well, then, what do you remember? she asked. He frowned with the effort, but his eyes began to well up with tears of fright. He reached for her hand and she took it, worried at how violently it was shaking. Nothing, he said, finally. I remember nothing. Nothing? Mila said. How did you get hurt? I remember nothing, he said quietly. But underneath the calm she could hear the edge of desperation, sharp and cold, as it threatened to cut through his demeanor and turn him into a quivering wreck. Next in the Series: 2.
